BOST. ADDRESS -
BROAD STREET

5 5, 7, 63-73, 64-70, 72, 102 Broad Street and 175 Milk Street are the scattered survivors of the uniform buildings constructed from the designs of Charles Bulfinch in the Broad Street Association's development. Dating from 1810, they are the oldest buildings in the District. Originally each brick unit was four stories high with small, square fourth-story windows. Although major alterations have been made to windows, ground floors, and rooflines, the Federal style is still evident, particularly in 7, 64-70, and 72 Broad Street, and 175 Milk Street, occupied by Patten's Restaurant.

One of the few granite stone mercantile/warehouse buildings to survive the Boston fire of 1873, this 1853 landmark structure was renovated by architect Dennis C. Rieske as the new headquarters for the Boston Society of Architects (above). Purchased at a foreclosure sale, the structure required extensive rehabilitation for which the Boston Landmarks Commission set the standard. The BLC regulated the reconstruction of the mansard roof and gutter system, window replacement, shop front elevations, masonry cleaning techniques, and the paint scheme.

7 99-107 and 109-125 Broad Street exemplify the contrasting uses of granite as a building material in 19th century structures. At 99-107 Broad Street, built in 1854, the large, smooth granite slabs act as bearing walls. These slabs give the warehouse the straightforward simplicity associated with modern architecture. 109-125 Broad Street portrays another use of granite in a later construction period, the 1870's. Used only as a facing material, the smaller, rough-hewn granite blocks of its facade project a softer texture than its neighbor. The smaller sized stone allows variety in the shape of window openings. Both warehouses express the inherent monumentality and austerity of granite. Note: Look west between the warehouses to observe the complementary relationship of the side wall of 109 Broad Street to the curve of Wendell Street, once known as Half Moon Place.

Once called Bush Tree Hill

Partially laid out in 1855 as Independence Square. Its sparse appearance today belies its early embellishments of plants, trees, fountain & cast iron fences which helped attract real estate activity to that section in late 1850's & 1860's.

The Charles River Crossing, part of the Central Artery/Tunnel Project, is the first asymmetrical cable-stayed bridge of North America (costing $50 million). It will span the Charles River between Boston and Charlestown, and it will replace the existing double-decker trussed bridge. The bridge will cover the stretch of Interstate 93 that is elevated. Bechtel/Parsons Brinckerhoff and Wallace, Floyd Associates is developing Menn's concept for the bridge. Article includes color photographs.

A major portion of the Navy Yard is slated for development by the Boston Redevelopment Authority. Plans include the recycling of the Yard's 19th century structures, construction of a 6.4 acre waterfront park, and new construction to accomodate housing, commercial and institutional facilities, and possibly light industrial uses. The portion of the Navy Yard now open to the public is the USS Constitution National Historic Site.
